HOSHIGAKI-----

HOSHIGAKI: MASSAGED, HAND-DRIED PERSIMMON A method of peeling the unripe persimmon, then massaging it for four to six weeks as it ripens and dries. The end product is like the texture of a dried date with a light dusting of naturally formed white sugar.

Hoshigaki quality changes with time and temperature. For best quality, we opt to ship during cool weather. We advise that the recipient be at the shipping address on the day of delivery. Please do not order hoshigaki if you are going away and no one will be picking up your mail. Hoshigaki does not do well stored in a heated room (like the post office or your house). The freezer is the best place to store hoshigaki both long and short term. We encourage you to follow up on order forms sent through the mail, especially near election time.

Supply is limited due to the aging work force. Please submit your orders as early as possible, since earliest orders ship first. Depending on weather and quality of product, shipments may not begin until the end of November or beginning of December.

ITEM CODE	ITEM DESCRIPTION	PRICE
DK	HOSHIGAKI 1 pound in a clear bag. Usually 6-12 pieces.	$52.00

During the drying season we put in long hours working on hoshigaki, often until midnight. When we get home we put in more hours preparing packages for shipment and conscientiously tracking each order. It takes time away from our badly needed sleep when people do not promptly confirm receipt of their order. We would appreciate it if you could help us get more sleep by promptly answering email. Thank you.
