HOSHIGAKI:

A method of peeling the unripe persimmon then massaging it for four to six weeks as it ripens and dries. End product is like the texture of a dried date with a light dusting of naturally formed sugar.

Hoshigaki quality changes with time and temperature. For best quality, we opt to ship during cool and cold weather. We advised that the recipient be at the shipping address on the day of delivery. Do not order hoshigaki if you are going away and no one will be picking up your mail. Hoshigaki does not do well stored in a heated room (like the post office or your home). The freezer is the best place to store them for the short and long term. You can remove them from the freezer 3 to 5 hours before consuming.

We begin accepting orders in October but hoshigaki is often not ready for shipping till December. Orders are fill in the order received.

As always, there is a limited supply. You should get email confirmation of receipt of your order as well as tracking number when available.

ITEM	DESCRIPTION	PRICE
DK	One pound hoshigaki in a seal top bag. Usually 6 to 12 pieces.	$68

Note: Please use the comment box on the order form for special requests or questions. Let us know if recipient is away and unable to retrieve the order on certain days.

During the drying season we put in long hours working on hoshigaki, often until midnight. When we get home, we put in more hours preparing packages for shipment and conscientiously tracking each order. It takes time away from our badly needed sleep when people do not promptly confirm receipt of their order. We would appreciate it if you could help us get more sleep by promptly answering email. Thank you.
